AFRICA'S WATER DEVELOPMENT NEEDS

Nico Pieterse
Vice President

It was a privilege to attend a recent workshop in Johannesburg, South Africa on Sustainable Water Resources which had been organized by the African Development Bank (ADB) and the African Development Bank (AFDB) and aimed to share the views of the expert group on sustainable development in the water sector in the African continent. The workshop was held in the presence of the African Development Bank (ADB) and the African Development Bank (AFDB) and aimed to share the views of the expert group on sustainable development in the water sector in the African continent. As a Vice President of the African Development Bank (ADB) and the African Development Bank (AFDB), I was pleased to participate in this workshop and to share my views on the water sector in Africa. The workshop was held in the presence of the African Development Bank (ADB) and the African Development Bank (AFDB) and aimed to share the views of the expert group on sustainable development in the water sector in the African continent.

Some of the key findings from the workshop are as follows:

- Africa is a continent with a high potential for water resources, but the water resources are not being fully utilized.
- The water resources are not being fully utilized due to a number of factors, including the lack of investment in water infrastructure, the lack of water management institutions, and the lack of water management policies.
- The water resources are not being fully utilized due to a number of factors, including the lack of investment in water infrastructure, the lack of water management institutions, and the lack of water management policies.

It is clear that Africa has a long way to go in order to meet its water needs. The African Development Bank (ADB) and the African Development Bank (AFDB) are committed to supporting the African continent in its efforts to meet its water needs. We will continue to work with the African continent to develop sustainable water resources and to improve water management practices.
